Police: Tenn. theater attack suspect had been committed 4 times

(CNN) The man who was killed Wednesday by Nashville police after he allegedly went after moviegoers with a hatchet and pepper spray had been committed to a mental institution four times, police spokesman Don Aaron told reporters. Vincente David Montano was committed twice in 2004 and twice in 2007, said Aaron, citing officials in Rutherford County. Montano had been arrested Murfreesboro, Tennessee, in 2004 in a case of assault and resisting arrest, police said. "We have no motive for (Wednesday's attack)," Aaron said. Montano had an airsoft pistol with him that he aimed and fired at police in the theater, Aaron said. Such a weapon looks like a semiautomatic pistol but fires plastic or BB pellets. Montano's mother filed a missing person's report with Texas Rangers two days ago and they had notified authorities in Tennessee, Aaron said. In the report, his mother, Denise Pruitt, told authorities that Montano was diagnosed with paranoid schizophrenia in 2006. "Ms. Pruitt advised Vincente has several other health issues and has a hard time taking care of himself," the report says. It lists his address as "homeless." Pruitt, who lives in Florida, last saw her son in Illinois in March 2013.

Hiroshima marks 70 years since bomb

(Al Jazeera) Bells tolled and thousands bowed their heads in prayer in Hiroshima on Thursday at ceremonies marking the 70th anniversary of the world's first atomic bombing while survivors warned about Japan's moves away from its pacifist constitution. Many with memories of the war and its aftermath are scathing about Abe's steps away from Japan's pacifist constitution in pursuit of a more robust security stance, and survivors of the bombing lambasted Abe at a meeting after the commemoration ceremony. "These bills will bring the tragedy of war to our nation once again," said Yukio Yoshioka, 86. "They must be withdrawn." Abe, who in a speech at the ceremony called for abolishing nuclear weapons, replied by repeating his view that the legislation was essential to ensure Japan's safety. At 8:15 a.m., the exact time the bomb dropped by the B-29 aircraft, the Enola Gay, exploded on August 6, 1945, the crowd stood for a moment of silence in the heavy summer heat while cicadas shrilled, the Peace Bell rang and hundreds of doves were released into the sky. Keigo Miyagawa, 89, was 19 at the time. "It felt like lightning. I saw this strong flash, and it was followed by this sound, and it swept me off my feet. I lost consciousness", he recalled. "When I woke up ... I was injured and bleeding." The U.S. bomb, "Little Boy," the first nuclear weapon used in war, killed 140,000 people in Hiroshima. A second bomb, "Fat Man," dropped over Nagasaki three days later, killed another 70,000, prompting Japan's surrender in World War II. The bombings remain the only use of nuclear weapons for warfare in history. Hiroshima Mayor Kazumi Matsui urged that nuclear weapons, which he called "the absolute evil and ultimate inhumanity," be abolished and demanded the creation of security systems that do not rely on military might. He renewed an invitation to world leaders to visit Hiroshima and Nagasaki to see the scars themselves, during the G-7 summit in Japan next year. "President Obama and other policymakers, please come to the A-bombed cities, hear the hibakusha (surviving victims) with your own ears, and encounter the reality of the atomic bombings," he said. "Surely, you will be impelled to start discussing a legal framework, including a nuclear weapons convention." Many of those gathered for the ceremony renewed their calls for peace. With the average age of survivors now exceeding 80 for the first time this year, passing on their stories is considered an urgent task. There were 5,359 hibakusha who died over the past year, bringing the total death toll from the Hiroshima bombing to 297,684. "My grandfather died here at that time and I keep wondering what he felt then," said Tomiyo Sota. "He was still 21 years old and it pains me to think he died so young."

Weak ridging will promote warm and dry weather through Thursday. An approaching low pressure system will impact northern California Thursday night and Friday bringing a slight chance for showers and thunderstorms to interior areas through the weekend.

Medford Weather:

Quieter conditions today will continue through Thursday. Relatively weak offshore flow will, however, bring low humidities and moderate to poor overnight recoveries to the higher elevations of northern California.

Reno Weather:

Widespread rain and chances for thunderstorms return Thursday night and Friday as low pressure approaches the Sierra. There is also a slight chance for a few showers or thunderstorms Saturday afternoon. Dry weather returns by Sunday with afternoon temperatures slightly below normal.

San Francisco Weather:

An upper level low pressure system off the central California coast is moving eastward. As it progresses Thursday night, associated mid and upper level moisture will spread a chance of showers and thunderstorms across the greater San Francisco and Monterey Bay regions. Southeast California Weather:

Moisture will be on the increase today providing a threat of afternoon and evening showers and thunderstorms along with cooler afternoon temperatures today and Friday.

Thunderstorms Possible late Thursday and Thursday Night

Low pressure will approach the Central California Coast late Thursday. This low may interact with subtropical moisture to produce thunderstorms across the San Francisco Bay Area and Monterey Bay Area from Thursday afternoon through Thursday Night.

IMPACTS

- Initially, thunderstorms may be dry, which could result in fire starts
- Brief heavy downpours possible later.
